1. The Filimon Sarbu textile mill, formerly known as the Atlantic, is located in Galati. There are 660 persons employed at this factory which is at work on textiles for the use of the Soviet Army.
2. Twenty two thousand meters of cloth sheeting and towels are manufactured during every eight hour shift; this total is produced by 460 looms which are in constant use during the three daily shifts.
3. The cloth produced is used for the manufacture of Soviet Army uniforms.
4. The textile mill, like all factories in Rumania, sent selected women workers to a nurses training school. These schools were started in 1950 and were established in most of the larger factories and mills. The second named informant was one of 30 girls from the Filimon Sarbu mill who went to the Government-sponsored school.
5. The course lasted ten months with one week training every third week and was held in the factory itself. The trainees were taught first aid. Political training was also given by a member of the Rumanian Workers Party. Some of the directors of the textile mill, who had no medical training, were the instructors.
